Part 6 Answer the question of section A to C.

A Read the following passage of question 1 and 2. Infer the meaning of the underlined words and choose the best answer from choices ①~④ for 42 and 43.

Question 1

Paul: It's interesting that John and Nick don't resemble each other at all even though they're brothers.

Jack: Really? Are they that unlike?

Paul: John is an outstanding athlete but Nick is no good at any sports. On the other hand, Nick is a math genius while John really hates math.

Jack: It's horses for courses, isn't it?

Paul: Yes, exactly.

In this dialog, horses for courses means "42."

- ① all brothers have common tastes
- ② animals have obedient attitudes
- ③ different people have different specialties
- ④ people play sports in various places

Question 2

Commensalism is an association between two organisms in which one benefits and the other neither benefits nor harms. The smaller fish attach themselves along with most of the larger fish. They are a good example. They live off small scraps of food that float in the water. Not to disclose due to copyrights reserved. They are not in the shark's line of vision, but the amount they eat is too small to affect the shark, so the shark neither gains nor loses from the association.

In this passage, commensalism means 43.

- ① a strong tendency on the part of some animals to keep their territory clean
- ② a survival strategy adopted by large fish such as sharks, which eat other fish
- ③ relationships in which one species depends on another without harming it
- ④ special TV programs which feature some of the wonders of nature

- 8 The following passage is a part of the discussion between a Japanese student and an international student the discussion is about which subject should Japanese high schools require students to study. world history or Japanese history. Choose the best answer from choice ①-④ for (A) and (B).

Teacher: Today, we're going to discuss which subject Japanese high schools should require students to study, world history or Japanese history. Does anyone have any comments on this question? Mary?

Mary: I think the purpose of studying history is to examine the experiences of people in the past and learn a lesson of the future by learning lessons from them. In an increasingly globalized world, young people will have more opportunities to meet people from various countries and work with them, not just overseas but at home too. Unless they understand the histories and the cultures of other countries, young Japanese people will not be able to communicate with people from other countries effectively. Also, many problems, such as global warming, affect everyone in the world. Unless we work together on a global level, we cannot hope to find solutions to them. I think that high school students should study world history in order to prepare them for dealing with global issues in the future.

Teacher: All right. Mary thinks that (A).

Not to disclose due to copyrights reserved.

- ① if you have a lot about world history, you will be promoted to great company
- ② internationally-minded people don't need a knowledge of Japanese history
- ③ world history is clearly much more difficult to study than Japanese history
- ④ young people should develop a global viewpoint by studying world history

Teacher: Do you have any other ideas? Another?

Another: I studied both Japanese history and world history in high school, and I think it would be ideal for students to study both of them. I had great difficulty passing both courses at once, but now I am sure the experience was beneficial. However, under the current education system in Japan, it seems impossible to require students to study both. If that's so, in my opinion, students should study Japanese history. When studying abroad, I was asked a lot of questions about Japan, but I could not give satisfactory answers even though I had studied Japanese history. I wished I had studied it much better. My foreign friends wondered why I knew so little about my own country. Even then, I have always felt that people who want to be able to play a positive role in society should learn about their own country.

Teacher: Thank you, Another. You mean that (B).

- ① both world history and Japanese history can easily be studied in high school
- ② it is a shame not to be able to answer questions about world history
- ③ people should learn as much as possible about their own country
- ④ when abroad you will really have to answer questions about your country

Teacher: Any other comments on the question, James?

James: The other day I was really interested to discover that in Japanese high school world history, not Japanese history, is a compulsory subject. In my country, however, students have to take world or American history to graduate. There are many colleges which even require exchange students to learn it. I think education is the period when people try to establish their identities. They really want to know who they are. Is it possible for them to do so without learning about the origins and development of their own country, what their ancestors were like or what work they have? I think it is also important to learn about Not to disclose due to copyrights reserved. However they are familiar with the rules of their own society, it is comparatively easy to grapple with the history of their own country and to find their identities by learning it.

Teacher: Thank you for giving us your opinion, James. What you emphasize is that

- Ⓐ a knowledge of world history is essential for young Japanese
- Ⓑ American history should be studied more in Japanese high schools
- Ⓒ Japanese students should study Japanese history in order to know who they are
- Ⓓ people's identities have nothing to do with the traditions of their society

C. Choose the best answer from choices (1-4) to fill in the blank. (1) (2)

The Vikings were explorers who lived in the region that is now Denmark, Norway, and Sweden. They often went out for distant lands. Although their boats were made more than 1,000 years ago, the sails are as big as today. Vikings tell of the earliest voyages to new lands and of their raids - sudden, unexpected attacks during which they killed people, seized what they could and partly left. Two types of the Vikings have emerged from these accounts. One type is of the Vikings who led warriors who led many attacks. The other type is of them as noble explorers who searched for a passage to exploration. Both types are true. Not to disclose due to copyrights reserved.

In their travels, the Vikings reached Europe, Russia, North Africa, and North America. Along the way, they often attacked the lands they passed through. Their attacks and battles were carried out wherever they went. During a raid, the Vikings would seize whatever food and captured slaves they could fit on their ships. (1) The women, women, Freydis, led an attack on North America. When the men in her boat failed to follow her final orders, Freydis ordered them not to leave.

Despite the Vikings' status as raiders, not all Viking voyages were violent. Trade was carried in their voyages. Although they might attack one town, (2) a group of Viking traders reached America by way of sailors' tales and news. The group arrived peacefully in the long island. In fact, some believe that North, the leader, was the best of what became the American people.

Settlements were a common result of Viking voyages. Some Vikings took women by the sword, others arrived peacefully. In many cases, (3) although they were seen as warlike raiders, the Vikings had great respect for law. They called meetings in which local people acted as judge and jury. Their national meetings to make government decisions began among Vikings in Iceland in 930. These were the first assemblies of their kind. The system of law in England and the United States today is rooted in the Viking system.

- ① Suddenly they stopped attacking and settle down.
- ② The Vikings were good at counting and measuring.
- ③ They used weapons made of stone when they attacked.
- ④ Women, too, took part in the raids when needed.

48

- ① they didn't begin to trade with other countries
- ② they often chose to destroy a town and run away
- ③ they would also burn down another town by the sea
- ④ they would approach another in peace to trade goods

49

- ① the Vikings brought with them their system of law
- ② there were large groups of boats being rowed
- ③ they kept the rate of exchange as low as possible
- ④ they wanted to get a lot of raw material cheaply

Part 7 Answer the questions of section A and B.

A Read the following passage and table, then choose the best answer from choices ①~④ to answer questions 1 to 3 ~ .

North Americans seem to be cutting down on the number of hours they sleep. The number of people who work for 12-13 hours a day is increasing. On average, North Americans are only getting about 6-8 hours of sleep a day, although most adults need about 7-10 hours of sleep. In fact, over the past century, North Americans have reduced their nightly sleeping hours by about two-thirds. These lost hours of sleep have been replaced mostly by work and work-related activities.

Some experts are worried that long workdays are becoming a danger to the workplace. A good worker is Not to disclose due to copyrights reserved. Studies related to working hours indicate, however, that excessive work hours are directly or indirectly a cause of the most accidents in industry, such as the nuclear accident at Three Mile Island and the explosion of the space shuttle, Challenger.

Studies have also shown that an afternoon nap can significantly increase mental abilities and improve mood. Researchers at NASA have studied the effects of taking forty-minute naps on pilots on overseas international flights. They found that when pilots napped, they were more alert, alertness and mood had improved. Their reactions were faster than before than those of some members who hadn't napped.

Question 1 The information in the graph suggests that 50 as many people feel sleepy at 4:00 pm as at noon.

- ① at most one-third
- ② one and a half times
- ③ less than twice
- ④ almost four times

Question 2 According to the passage, 51.

- ① everyone should average at least ten hours' sleep a day
- ② North Americans used to work about 20% longer than they do today
- ③ the accident at Three Mile Island was probably due to fatigue
- ④ major accidents are not connected to the amount of sleep

Question 3 According to the passage, researchers at NASA found that 52.

- ① a great number of accidents have been caused by napping pilots
- ② even a nap of 40 minutes can improve pilots' mental abilities
- ③ on international flights pilots need to sleep at least ten hours a day
- ④ pilots who have just had a nap tend to react much more slowly

B Answer question 1 to 3.

Question 1 Choose the best description for the following picture from choices ①~④.

53

- ① Usually, the term "yogi" refers to traditional physical and mental disciplines emphasizing self-discipline, or spirituality in India. However, in this picture, a woman with long hair, wearing a T-shirt and leggings, is sitting on a mat, with her hands on her knees and her legs crossed. She is looking down at her hands with her eyes open, looking straight forward. Not to disclose due to copyrights reserved.
- ② Yoga, which has its origin in traditions and philosophies, is associated with a combination of breathing exercises, physical postures, and meditation. This picture illustrates one of the most popular Yogasanas. A short-haired woman, each of her feet firmly placed over the other leg, has her palms facing upward. She is relaxed, with her eyes half-closed and her lips closed so that she breathes through her nose.

- ⑤ Toga continued as a spiritual practice in Thailand, while in the Western world, a part of yoga, known as Iyengar, has grown popular as a form of physically-planned exercise. The posture Iyengar asana is unique, in which a woman without hair is practicing yoga. She lies on her back, breathing slowly, with her hands crossed in her stomach, her legs stretched out, and her eyes closed.
- ⑥ Yoga is now widely regarded simply as a way of keeping fit and healthy but it originates in Thailand. In this posture we see a woman with long hair wearing a crown and lying in a special posture in a temple and praying for peace. This is one of the most famous traditional poses, with her palms downward on the floor. She breathes slowly and slowly through her nose, and imagines her spirit floating peacefully in space.

Question 2 Read the following passage and choose the most suitable picture from those given (1-4).

The picture shows the current emblem of a football club with a long history. In the past, there were two lions in the emblem. Each of them stood for a football club, one for a club in the better area and the other for a club in the poorer area. They were united in 1995. At first, players from the two clubs did not get along well, but in 1998 they were closely united and became champions of the national football league. They then replaced the two lions with a single one wearing a crown. The crown in one hand made for courage and the lion in the other made for intelligence.

Question 3 Choose the most suitable story for the following picture from choices ①~④.

- ⑤ While a man is looking at a painting in a museum, he thinks that something is wrong with it. He notices that it is hung upside down. After a while, a friend of his shows up and says that the man is right. So they make up their minds to hang it in the right position. The museum clerk allows them to do so because the man says they aren't doing anything wrong.
- ⑥ Mark, an art teacher is visiting a museum. He is looking at a painting, when one of his students at college comes up. Mark explains what it's intended to represent and the student seems to be quite impressed with the painting. Then Mark goes on his way and they both work together to take the painting home. The museum clerk notices to stop them.
- ⑦ There is a village where the people are very poor. One is stealing a man who seems to be trying to make to remember something. Then an acquaintance of his appears and says hello. They talk about the situation and the acquaintance reminds him that the original belongs to a different museum. They try to take the original back to the other museum with the help of the museum clerk.
- ⑧ Mark is looking at a painting in a museum. He doesn't understand what it represents. Then a friend of his comes up and Mark tells him that something is wrong with the painting. His friend makes a suggestion and Mark agrees to the plan. They remove it from the wall and try to hang it the other way up. The clerk at the museum notices to stop them.

Part 8 Read the following passage and choose the best answer from choices ①~④ for question 1 to 7

- (1) For ten years Fred Turner had worked as a social worker and community organizer with teenagers in San Antonio and New York's Lower East Side. He was tired and wanted to get away from New York. In 1988 he moved to Aspen, Colorado. When he couldn't find a job as a social worker, Fred decided to open a coffee house, Greenwich Village style. He bought an old house in New York and moved here to start his new house. This was long before the greatest coffee house, and Fred was depressed he was too far ahead of his time. When the cold wind, he migrated to Mendocino, California. He was the old master and called his "greatest coffee" by the ground. From these two experiences was born the Thanksgiving Coffee Company.
- (2) In these days, Fred felt that the coffee the American coffee industry was having on people in other parts of the world. Frederick James Jones, a coffee farmer in Nicaragua, lived with the reality every day. As a founding member of the Specialty Coffee Association of America, Fred asked Frederick to speak to members about "Coffee, human rights, and the Third World Economy." Frederick then asked all 100 members to come visit his Nicaraguan fields.
- (3) Fred argued Frederick's position. When he arrived in Nicaragua, it didn't take him long to see things through Frederick's eyes. As they left the airport, hundreds stood children in the street. They were all looking at him with a mixture of pride and hope. Not to disclose due to copyrights reserved.
- (4) Fred took an hour to look at the coffee industry. He was depressed to realize that his company, Thanksgiving Coffee, was selling a product that was actually harming rather than helping people. Nicaraguan coffee growers had no choice but to sell to a handful of giant coffee houses, which resulted in coffee prices so low that it was barely worth selling the beans. For every pound of gourmet coffee sold in the United States for six to ten dollars, the farmers received only thirty-five to fifty cents. A coffee picker's daily wage was less than a dollar, or one hundred dollars per year, barely enough to buy food and soap. Seeing that the Nicaraguans were in difficulties, he realized that the coffee industry needed to do more than just sell great tasting coffee -- it needed a movement. But what could he do?
- (5) Fred decided that he wanted to give something back to the coffee pickers. After much soul searching, he created the company's first "social justice" program, "Coffee for Peace." For every pound of coffee sold, he returned fifteen cents to the Nicaraguan coffee farmers' organization to help with education and health care. Coffee for Peace was an important first step in promoting coffee, making sure that people who grow it also eventually get to change in the coffee industry.

(15) The paying the farmers a fair price for their coffee wasn't enough. Sustainable growing practices for coffee introduced a host of environmental problems. In the 1970s, some farmers introduced a new kind of high-yield coffee plant, which grew only in the hot sun. To keep up with their world demand, farmers cut down their forests to make way for large coffee plantations. Sadly, the forest was home to thousands of animals and birds, including 100 species of songbirds per acre -- the same delicate songbirds that migrate north to the United States and sing to us in sweetly every spring. Something had to be done before the dense tropical forest, with all its biodiversity, was completely destroyed.

(16) As Paul decided to offer Fairground Coffee from plants that grew in the forest under large shade trees, he was also inspired by the success of the business. Starting innovation in his town, Thanksgiving Coffee developed a unique marketing strategy aimed at the 40 million tourists in America who regularly enter the annual migration. The company created a line of Fairground Coffee and served hot brew everywhere to begin.

(17) Recognizing shade coffee, Paul made the entire industry realize that there's a link between coffee and the environment, between the farmer's quality of life and the quality of their product. Today most specialty coffee are shade-grown, and the open sun coffee used has faded. Over time, many of Paul's "ethical" ideas have become industry standards. Coffee companies are learning from and working with the farmers. A little awareness goes a long way. From low-price drinking coffee, now you're in Paul and Francisco, to "let's get a cup, let's get a cup."
